First Story

Fox and Rabbit lived quite far away, in a bright little house beyond the molehills.

One night Rabbit came racing home across the fields and up to the door, which Fox had locked because it was almost midnight. Inside, Fox was lying awake with a hollow feeling in his belly. He had been up three times already for something to eat. A bowl of pasta with sauce. Another bowl of pasta with sauce. Then a bowl of pasta without sauce, because the sauce was all gone. But the hollow feeling was still there.

When Rabbit knocked, Fox opened straightaway. Rabbit was too out of puff to say a thing, so Fox went first. "Rabbit, I can't sleep! There's a hole in my belly, as if something's missing!"

Fox and Rabbit live quite far away, in a bright little house beyond the molehills...

Fox read and read until it was dark. Then he opened the window to let in some air. The cherry tree had blossomed, and earlier that day bees had visited to tell the flowers about the tasty red cherries that would come. Now a gust of wind swept the tired petals from the tree and through the window into the house. More and more of them.

"Snow! Let's go sledding, Fox," Rabbit mumbled in his fever. Fox fetched the sled and lifted Rabbit onto it. He tacked him to snugly and pulled a pom-pom hat over his ears. He pushed the sled back and forth through the petals, for minutes then for hours. Rabbit sang deliciously about snow and sheep and all the white things he could think of, until finally he fell asleep.

Fox scribbled down the story about sledding through cherry blossoms, then he dozed off too.

When they wish each other a good night, sometimes the rustling pear tree, the raspberries and the stars join in.

These heart-warming stories of friendship, fun and life in the country have everything it takes to become family favourites.
